Re: HealthCare.gov outages

Dear Administrator Verma,

As organizations working to ensure consumers understand their health insurance options and are able to enroll, we are writing to you with deep concern regarding the recent Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) announcement that HealthCare.gov will have extended, scheduled outages.

HealthCare.gov is the primary portal for millions of consumers who will be shopping for, enrolling and re-enrolling in Marketplace health insurance during the upcoming 2018 open enrollment period. As such, we strongly urge you to cancel any scheduled outages not completely necessary for typical website maintenance and take action to minimize the impact these outages will have on consumers.

In the open enrollment period for the 2017 plan year, 8.7 million individuals signed up for insurance through HealthCare.gov in 38 states. This platform has improved or grown over time, with new information and tools for consumers looking to understand their health insurance options. According to HHS, consumer engagement in shopping and comparing health coverage options was higher on HealthCare.gov compared to State-based Marketplace websites in 2017. Additionally, 65% of re-enrollees on HealthCare.gov actively chose a plan, demonstrating that HealthCare.gov is not just for new enrollees but for current enrollees shopping around for better plans. Therefore, access to this website is critical for all consumers who want to know their health care options.

While HealthCare.gov underwent periodic and short shutdowns for maintenance in previous open enrollment periods, the plans announced by HHS for this period are unprecedented. By shutting down for 12 hours during every Sunday but one, in addition to the first night of open enrollment, uncountable numbers of potential health insurance shoppers will not be able to shop for, enroll or re-enroll in coverage. As a result, many of these consumers may choose or be unable to, due to work or other schedules, return to enroll.

For working, low-income Americans in particular, Sunday may be the only day of the week they do not have work, and therefore the only convenient time to make complex decisions like signing up for health insurance. Outages during Sundays also will disproportionately impact religious institutions that meet on that day and work to help their congregants access health coverage. In addition, the extensive scheduled outages are further concerning given the shortened six-week open enrollment period, confusion about the status of the Affordable Care Act, and significant reduction in federal resources supporting outreach and enrollment.

Given this context, we strongly urge CMS to take immediate action to minimize the outages to HealthCare.gov, both in frequency and duration. With an open-enrollment period half the length of previous years, outages will have even bigger impacts than they might have in those years. If these outages are unavoidable, we request that: 1) CMS provide a public explanation for their necessity compared to previous years, including why such maintenance must be conducted during key business hours, and 2) that CMS explain its plan(s) for how to provide information and follow-up to consumers who may try to access HealthCare.gov during these times.

Sincerely,
